Keeping Horse Records- Tips for getting organized

Breeders and owners that have horses need to keep records on their horses for breeding and sales. Here are some tips for easy record keeping all in one place.

FILE Storage- Choose a place that is easy access and you know where it is at all times. It could be a file drawer, a box or file cabinet. Keep all your horse records in one place. Mark it “Horse Records” if it is a box or drawer so you know what that box or drawer is for. Make a file folder for each horse with his/her name and reg# as label. All horse files go into that one drawer, box or file cabinet.

Individual Horse file folders- Keep the registration papers, DNA reports, vet records, Bill of Sale receipts, worming, farrier care, awards, articles, breeding reports, breeding certificates, special features about that individual horse in his/her file. When you need something for that horse just pull the file and everything is right there. The file folder could also be an 8x11 envelope or Priority mailer or regular manila file folder. Just be sure to mark it with horses name & reg#.

Breeders files- Breeders must keep breeding certificates on all horses bred, both mares and stallions. Fill out a breeding certificate on each horse, page 2 of registration form, or the long form breeding certificate. File this in the horses file, include signatures, dates bred and how bred. Also keep a stallion report each year for every mare he breeds, dates, mare name, etc. Keep this in the stallions file until time to send to ICHO for yearly reports.

Recording Births- All births need recorded for date of birth, an easy way to do this is to mark on the calendar the day it happens and then transfer the data to the horses file, make a new file for each new foal. Record birth date, sire and dam, color at birth, if curly or SC and take photos (front, rear, both right and left sides) and keep in their file. Then when it is time to register you have all the data already recorded and photos ready as well.

When everything is done ahead of time it makes registration and transfer so much easier because you have everything you need at your fingertips. Take the stress out of record keeping and paperwork and have more time for fun things like grooming and riding your horse J

Kootenai Curlies

“Here at Kootenai Curly horses we have produced some very good quality horses. We also handle, train and ride our horses so that they are trustworthy. At this time, we are developing a line of very gentle and very sweet natured curly horses that are “family friendly” and “beginner friendly.” For this reason, we are holding back our very best young stock so that we can present this line to the public in the near future. Please be patient with us and follow our progress as we prepare this good family line to serve the curly world.”

The Sioux and the Curly Horse

Rod Vaughn shared this information that was shared with him as Native people came to the Crow Creek Reservation when the Curlies arrived there in 2003. ICHO sponsored this reunion of Curly horse with the Sioux through Rod Vaughan of Diamond Willow Ministries. Jackie Richardson gave NTS Curly Bear, David Patton donated two horses and ICHO helped purchase one and donated her. The Fairchild's also donated Curlies and they also acquired Red Cloud the Curly as he was donated later. It seems there were Curlies in Crow Creek and Pine Ridge Reservations years ago as well as Eli Bad Warrior's Curlies in the Cheyenne River Reservation. This was new info, as we only previously knew about Fort Berthold and Eli Bad Warrior Curlies. We also tried to contact Eli Bad Warrior's grandson. Before Sharon passed away she asked me to write to him, I did, but I never got a response so I asked if someone from the Sioux res could write and they did but just did not hear back unfortunately. Bunny

From Rod Vaughn:

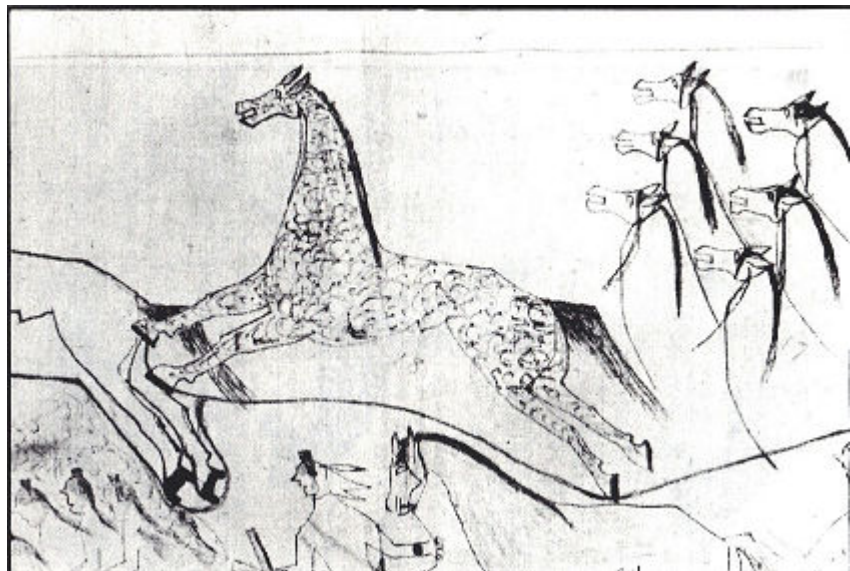

Already I have spoken with one elder here on the reservation (mid-70s) that remembers the Curly Horse. He broke horses and has been very involved with horses all his life. He recalls one curly coated horse being on this reservation when he was a young boy. He said he remembers that it's coat was very curly and that even the mane and tail were curly. He also said that it was faster than the other horses. He didn't know where it came from or what became of it but he clearly remembers it because it was so unique.

Also, a younger man that is here on the reservation but is from the Pine Ridge, recalls elders here speaking of the Curly buffalo ponies. ~

This is an email that my friend Sheldon forwarded to me a few days ago. Sheldon is a member of the Lower Brule Sioux Tribe (that reservation is just across the Missouri River from where we live on the Crow Creek Sioux Reservation). Sheldon is also a direct descendant of Meriwether (sp?) Lewis of the Lewis & Clark Expedition. Lewis fathered a son from a Lower Brule Sioux woman here on his way upriver in 1804. (Just a little L&C history for those of you interested.)

He is very interested, as are many here, about the Curly horses. It is exciting to see the interest among those on the reservations here growing.

Curly Horse on a Sioux Winter Count - Blue Thunder

Note the two references that talk about curly haired horses. I thought it was interesting. These are from winter counts.

Wintercount Creator: Battiste Good

Year: 931 - 1000

English Year:

Lakota Year:

Notes: From the time the man represented in [the previous image] was seventy years of age, i.e., from the year 931, time is counted by cycles of seventy years until 1700. This figure illustrates the manner of killing buffalo before and after the appearance of The-Woman. When the Dakotas had found the buffalo, they moved to the herd and corralled it by spreading their camps around it. The Man-Who-Dreamed-of-a-Wolf, seen at the upper part of the circle, with bow and arrow in hand, then shot the chief bull of the herd with his medicine or sacred arrow; at this, the women all cried out with joy, "He has killed the chief bull!" On hearing them shout the man with bow and arrow on the opposite side, the Thunder-Bird (wakinyan, accurately translated "the flying one") shot a buffalo cow, and the women again shouted with joy. Then all the men began to shout, and they killed as many as they wished. The buffalo heads and the blood-stained tracks show what large numbers were killed.

They cut off the head of the chief bull, and laid the pipe beside it until their work was done. They prayed to The-Woman to bless and help them as they were following her teachings. Having no iron or knives, they used sharp stones, and mussel shells, to skin and cut up the buffalo. They rubbed blood in the hides to soften and tan them. They had no horses, and had to pack everything on their own backs. The cyclic characters that embrace the period from 1001 to 1140 illustrate nothing of interest not before presented. Slight distinction appears in the circles so that they can be identified, but without enough significance to merit reproduction (Mallery 1893:291-92).

Wintercount Creator: Battiste Good

Year: 1141 - 1210

English Year:

Lakota Year:

Notes: Among a herd of buffalo, surrounded at one time during this period, were some horses. The people all cried out, "there are big dogs with them," having never seen horses before, hence the name for horse, sunka (dog) tanka (big), or sunka (dog) wakan (wonderful or mysterious). After killing all the buffalo they said "let us try and catch the big dogs;" so they cut a thong out of a hide with a sharp stone and with it caught eight, breaking the leg of one of them. All these years they used sharpened deer horn for awls, bone for needles, and made their lodges without the help of iron tools. {All other Dakota traditions yet reported in regard to the first capture of horses, place this important event at a much later period and long after horses were brought to America by the Spaniards. See this count for the year 1802-03, and also Lone Dog's Winter Count for the same year.} (Mallery 1893:292)

Wintercount Creator: Battiste Good

Year: 1631 - 1700

English Year:

Lakota Year:

Notes: This represents the first killing of buffalo on horseback. It was done in the year 1700, inside the circle of lodges pitched around the herd, by a man who was tied on a horse with thongs and who received the name of Hunts-inside-the-lodges. They had but one horse then, and they kept him a long time. Again the bundle of count-sticks is in the recorder's hands. This is the end of the obviously mythic part of the record, in which Battiste has made some historic errors. From this time forth each year is distinguished by a name, the explanation of which is in the realm of fact. It must be again noted that when colors are referred to in the description of the text figures, the language (translated) used by Battiste is retained for the purpose of showing the coloration of the original and his interpretation of the colors, which are to be imagined, as they can not be reproduced by the process used (Mallery 1893:293).

Wintercount Creator: Battiste Good

Year: 1762 - 1763

English Year: People were burnt winter.

Lakota Year:

Notes: They were living somewhere east of their present country when a prairie fire destroyed their entire village. Many of their children and a man and his wife, who were on foot some distance away from the village, were burned to death, as also were many of their horses. All the people that could get to a long lake, which was near by, saved themselves by jumping into it. Many of these were badly burned about the thighs and legs, and this circumstance gave rise to the name Sican-zhu, burnt thigh (or simply burnt as translated Brule by the French), by which they have since been known, and also to the gesture sign, as follows: "Rub the upper and outer part of the right thigh in a small circle with the open right hand, fingers pointing downward" (Mallery 1893:304-305).

This is the only winter count to give such an explanation for how the Sicangu/Brule acquired their tribal name.

Wintercount Creator: Battiste Good

Year: 1803 - 1804

English Year: Brought home Pawnee horses with their hair rough and curly winter.

Lakota Year:

Notes: The curly hair is indicated by the curved marks.

Lone Dog's Winter Count for the same year records the same incident, but states that the curly horses

I have a pony size, fading black mare who was born April 30, 2000, RCR Buffalo Jill 14 hands tall Sire Frostfires Tadpole dam Frostfires Xenia T. She is ICHO and ABCR registered. She scored a 77 at the NACHIP inspection 5/15/10, tied for Reserve Champion. Very good mare she had a palomino foal one year ago who might be a little taller than her dam and the foal has the berber carpet homozygous feel to her coat, both are for sale.

I also have a just turned 4 year old pink gelding with a really smooth gait that is starting his ground work now. He is going to be a really great horse and built very solid. I need to register him with ICHO. He is out of Amy Walls Tatonka and RCR Beautys Peppermint Patty who tied with Jill at the NACHIP inspection. He looked like a quarter horse when he was little and I believe he does foxtrot as he goes really smooth .I will try to get video. I also have a young ,soon to be gelding for sale that looks a lot like the “Lone Ranger” Indian horse, Scout, and that is what I call him. He is a minimal curly with really soft silky hair He is growing really tall and I think he may approach his dam’s height which would be 15.2 hands. He is out of my stallion Storm and Beauty’s Peppermint Patty. He is really awesome about fly spray does not try to get away when being sprayed. Feel free to contact me about my wonderful Curlies!

American Horse's father was born this year (Corbusier 1886:134).

As noted by Corbusier, this may have been a meeting with the Lewis and Clark Expedition. White Cow Killer notes the year 1790-91 as "All-the-Indians-see-the-flag winter," while Cloud Shield calls 1807-08 the year when "many people camped together and had many flags flying" (Corbusier 1886:132-33, 135).
